POSTKARTE

The Partridge (perdix cinerea), a bird of the Phasianidae family, is found in great profusion in the British Isles, and seems to be considerably on the increase. It measures about 12½ inches in length, and has a peculiar flight, commencing with a loud "whirr" and continuing with a glide until the required landing-place is reached. Partridges are principally bred for sporting purposes. The nest is made on the ground and contains 10 to 20 eggs.
